Shakespears and numerous less notable people, have depicted the disadvantages of twinship to the twins. But twinship has its advantages, says the Court case recently. A young Chefty had been assaulted and robbed and two persons were charged with the off-nee-a young Chisaman and a Malay. The Chotty swore to the identity of the Chinaman readily enough, and his evidence was clear and convicting natil Mr. Kliory (who appeared for the dalence) called in a twin brother of the accused who so much resembled him, that the Chetty could not for a moment swear which of the two had been his assailant. With Asiatic anutoness, however, the Chetty pointed out a mark on the neck of the prisoner and swere to his identity by that. The case will probably go to the Assizos, and the question of recomblance may have a material effect.
